

What we do . . .

We provide Native-specific resources to support students, professionals, faculty, and community leaders. Our coursework offers a Native American and Indigenous People perspective that addresses global issues affecting communities. Our unique curriculum covers social welfare, policy, history, governance, environmental issues, and more.

Offering
Innovative Social Work Studies

NASWSI, established by New Mexico Highlands University's Facundo Valdez School of Social Work, focuses on advanced practice for the complex history and social issues of Native Americans. It aims to educate future social workers. The State Legislature has supported the Institute since 2017.

Contact Us :

505-260-6181 (Office)

5041 Indian School Rd. NE
Albuquerque, NM 87110

www.naswsi.org

Native American Social Work Studies Institute

Facundo Valdez School of Social Work

Cultivating resiliency in tribal social work education and practice.

Our partnerships include UNM School of Medicine, Advocacy, Inc., and more

WE STRIVE TO WORK WITH TRIBAL LEADERS TO ENSURE WE ARE RESPONDING TO THEIR WORKFORCE NEEDS

Trusted Education and Training

NASWSI offers courses focused on Native American history, the Indian Child Welfare Act, tribal governance, and policies affecting tribal social work practices providing social work students with a comprehensive education in these areas.

Professionals can receive innovative trainings that cater to the specific needs of tribal communities, including Native Americans who reside off-reservation.

Research

Our collection includes more than 400 resources such as books, articles, and videos that cater to various course offerings, trainings, and student interests. Additionally, professionals can request research materials to enhance their practice.

How do we serve tribal communities?

INTERACTION

In-person and virtual presentations, skills-based training, and courses.

TOOLS

Our services include consultation and research-based material catering to professionals' specific needs.

CALL OR EMAIL US WITH YOUR QUESTIONS!