WHAT DOES RECOVERY COURT INVOLVE

You will have frequent meetings with your Probation Officer and treatment provider to develop, manage and update your treatment plan.

Your treatment plan is a roadmap to your recovery.

The Recovery Court consists of four (4) phases which are:

- Phase 1: Stabilization and Engagement
- Phase 2: Treatment
- Phase 3: Beginning of Maintenance
- Phase 4: Transitional Care and Maintenance

The Phase requirements are outlined in this manual. In addition to meeting with your Probation Officer and treatment provider, you must also attend Recovery Court sessions with your fellow participants and the Recovery Court Judge. It is required that you appear on time and are able and willing to share your progress with the group. You will also be closely monitored for drug and alcohol use. Testing is one of the ways that you can demonstrate to us and to yourself that you are committed to remain alcohol and drug free. It is also imperative that you maintain your sobriety for the good of the community. Together we will develop a treatment plan to assist in your recovery. Together we will help you become alcohol and drug free and avoid future involvement in crimes. We will expect a lot from you and you can expect a lot from us.

HOW TO PROGRESS IN THE PROGRAM

The Recovery Court Program operates on a point system of progression. The program is a minimum of one year and consists of four phases. A participant must accumulate 130 points in each phase to advance in the program. Failure to complete weekly program requirements may result in no points awarded for that week.

In the last phase of the program, Transitional Care, a participant must complete 12 weeks of aftercare in order to be eligible for graduation.

Incentives and sanctions are an integral part of the program. Point accumulation is the biggest incentive for participants, as well as high praise from the Judge, Probation Officer, and treatment provider.
