SUMMARY

Synopsis of Bill

Senate Bill 64 deletes the cockfighting exemption from the cruelty to animals statute and makes causing, sponsoring, arranging, holding or participating in cockfighting a fourth degree felony.

Significant Issues

- Animal rights groups state that cockfighting perpetuates violence in our communities. There is an undeniable link between cruelty to animals and violence toward humans.
- Intentional cruelty to animals and dog fighting are currently felonies in New Mexico. SB64 would extend protection to cocks.
- Cocks are creatures who do not have the capacity to consent to engage in the self-destructive behavior of fighting.

FISCAL IMPLICATIONS

There are significant law enforcement and court costs associated with cockfighting since these events tend to lead to or involve illegal activities such as gambling and abuse of alcohol.

OTHER SUBSTANTIVE ISSUES

Cockfighting is banned in every state except New Mexico and Louisiana. Cockfighting is banned in 13 New Mexico counties including Bernalillo and in 28 municipalities including Albuquerque.

Many New Mexicans believe that allowing animals to fight is cruel. Animal Protection of New Mexico has a poll that shows that 81% of New Mexicans support a ban on cockfighting.
