SUMMARY

Synopsis of Bill

House Bill 333 amends the Habitual Offenders Act and clearly establishes the legislature's intention that a felony DWI conviction is to be treated the same as any other felony conviction for the purposes of Habitual Offender proceedings.

Significant Issues

HB 333 arises out of the New Mexico Supreme Court's decision in State v. Anaya, 123 N.M. 14, 933 P.2d 223 (1997). In Anaya, a majority of the court held that it was not clear when the legislature amended § 66-8-102 (G) to punish a fourth DWI conviction as a fourth degree felony that the legislature intended the habitual offender statute to apply.

FISCAL IMPLICATIONS

Longer sentences will likely mean more DWI cases will go to trial and, if a conviction is achieved, more individuals will spend more time incarcerated. This has both an administrative and fiscal impact on the Public Defenders Office, the District Attorneys Office, the Courts, and the Department of Corrections.

The contract/private prison annual costs of incarcerating an inmate based upon FY02 actual expenditures is $23,552 per year for males. The cost for females is $25,117 per year.

The cost per client in the Probation and Parole program is $1,533 per year when standard supervision is appropriate. The cost per client in the intensive supervision programs is $2,964 per year.

ADMINISTRATIVE IMPLICATIONS

Habitual Offender proceedings are generally simple, straight-forward proceedings that are not contested.
