SIGNIFICANT ISSUES

Only Farmington in San Juan County fits the definition added by this bill. In 2000, the municipality had 37,844 people and San Juan is one of four Class A Counties.

The NM Association of Counties reports that the DWI funding for local government was increased significantly last year (House Bill 266 2007 Session). San Juan County should have gotten an additional $146 thousand from the new distribution.

DFA (analysis from SB164, a duplicate bill):

The level of alcohol and drug abuse is high in San Juan County and current funds may not be adequate to address these issues. According to TSB data San Juan ranks in the top 5 for fatal and injury DWI crashes in the state. San Juan County currently receives funding to address alcohol and drug prevention. This includes over one million dollars from LDWI fund, $485,000 in special appropriation for a Meth project plus other local, state and federal funds.

Studies and research indicate (www.alcoholtaxincrease.org) that raising taxes on the sale of alcohol decreases alcohol consumption especially among youth. This strategy is supported by research as one of the most effective means to reduce DWI and alcoholism. New Mexico has not increased the alcohol excise tax rates since 1993. This proposed change in law could reduce alcohol use in San Juan County.

The City of Farmington recently passed a resolution to support this legislation. The City took this action in response to public requests for more services to address DWI and alcohol and drug abuse in the area.
