SUMMARY

Synopsis of Bill

Senate Memorial 100 (SM 100) requests that the New Mexico legislature recognize Dr. Candace Kaye, associate professor and director of the New Mexico State University College of Education Institute for Early Childhood Studies, for her scholarship in comparative early childhood educational policies and curricula, her longstanding interest in Mongolia and its people, and her vision to formalize a mutually beneficial relationship between the Mongolian State University and New Mexico State University.

The memorial also recognizes New Mexico State University's College of Education for being the first and only institution of higher education in the world to formalize a relationship with the Mongolian State University of Education, and requests that members of the New Mexico legislature educate their constituents regarding the potential opportunities for exchange with Mongolia that have been opened by NMSU.

SIGNIFICANT ISSUES

The memorial notes that Dr. Candace Kaye is a former United States diplomatic attaché to Mongolia who, in 2010 and 2011, conducted research in Mongolia on the impact of its educational policies for young children. Through Dr. Kaye's efforts, NMSU has entered into a memorandum of understanding with the Mongolian State University of Education to promote the exchange of students, faculty and administrative staff.
